

Dr. Erin Stubblefield Phillips, DC, CPPM

Dr. Erin Stubblefield's career reflects a profound dedication to chiropractic care. Her journey began at just 14 years old. While in high school, she articulated her professional aspirations in a local newspaper article. Following this vision, she obtained her Doctor of Chiropractic degree from Palmer College of Chiropractic in 2006. Dr. Stubblefield began her professional practice in Illinois in 2006 before transitioning to the role of Clinical Educator at Cleveland University – Kansas City in 2010. Throughout her more than 13-year tenure in higher education, Dr. Stubblefield has undertaken a variety of key roles, ultimately rising to the respected position of Associate Professor. Her responsibilities encompassed serving as a Health Center Clinician, acting as a Clinical Liaison for Foot Levelers, Inc. from 2013 to 2023, and volunteering at the Kansas City CARE Health Clinic from 2013 to 2022. She is renowned for her substantial contributions to the field, including the development of innovative courses, the implementation of a flexible clinical curriculum tailored to diverse learning styles, and the establishment of significant policies. In early 2024, Dr. Stubblefield shifted her focus to independent office coaching and management, successfully attaining the Certified Physician Practice Manager credentials from AAPC in July 2024. That same year, she joined KMC University as a Specialist with an emphasis on collegiate education. This new direction underscores her enduring commitment to chiropractic education, now spanning nearly two decades, alongside her continuous pursuit of professional development and excellence. Outside of her professional commitments, Dr. Stubblefield is an avid sports enthusiast and enjoys participating in karaoke. She resides in the Kansas City Metro area with her husband.
